Announcing
UArizona Haury Tribal Resilience Initiative
Spring 2022 Native Pathways Awards

The Agnese Nelms Haury Program in Environment and Social Justice is pleased to announce the Spring 2022 Native Pathways Award call for proposals. Through the Tribal Resilience Initiative, the Native Pathways Award seeks to strengthen the academic pipeline for Native American and Indigenous Resilience students and scholars, with an emphasis on UArizona programs and people devoted to Native and Indigenous resilience education, research, and outreach.

In furtherance of these goals, the Haury Program will award grants in Spring 2022 for,

- The recruitment and support of faculty, researchers, and staff whose teaching, scholarship, or outreach centers on matters relevant to Native American and Indigenous resilience.
- The recruitment of masters and doctoral candidates who bring knowledge and experience on matters relevant to Native American and Indigenous resilience.
- Supporting the research of graduate students who bring knowledge and experience on matters relevant to Native American and Indigenous resilience.

Special consideration will be given to applicants (1) whose work addresses the severe water access and water quality challenges that face Native American and Indigenous communities, especially those within Arizona; and (2) who have experience or is interested in strengthening their skills related to tribal customs and governance, traditional knowledge, and ways of approaching resilience challenges of Native American and Indigenous communities that respect both.

These one-time Native Pathways Awards will be made on a rolling basis and evaluated as they are received. Funds are available immediately and must be spent within one year of receipt. Please note: we have limited funds available, and proposals received after funds have been exhausted will not be considered. Funds are available for up to $18,000 per applicant.

To apply:
Please submit a one-page letter of support from the Department head or Dean (if recruiting faculty, researchers, or staff members, and masters and doctoral candidates) or from the student’s faculty advisor (if supporting graduate students’ research), along with the candidate’s resumé or CV. The letter should include:

1) The work or research the candidate aims to accomplish in a period not exceeding one year once the award is received. It should include the candidate’s role and how their participation impacts the research or work on achieving Indigenous resilience.
2) Outcomes or deliverables the candidate intends to produce. For example, presentations, or publications as part of the research or work.
3) Spending Plan. It could include candidate salary, equipment, travel, conference attendance, etc.

Submit your proposal to Toni Massaro, Haury Program Executive Director, massaro@arizona.edu with a copy to nancypetersen@arizona.edu. Include the subject: Native Pathways Award

Proposals leading to a successful award must comply with Haury Program award requirements, such as providing a final report and following all UArizona policies. Funds will be awarded to the Department head, Dean or faculty member submitting the request. For questions contact: haury@email.arizona.edu
